With her feelings now realized, Mary Crawford is beginning to entertain thoughts of herself on the brink of marital bliss, but taking the advice of her old friend, John Heathcliff, she is not wishing to rush into romance. Therefore all things must proceed in moderation and Edmund Bertram and her are both experiencing the joys and pains that come with partiality for one another. These things have proceeded well enough until the pleasures and complexities of life at Mansfield Park begin to enter their lives. Mr. Tom Bertram has returned, comes in company of Mr. Yates, and they both bring a whirlwind of activity with them. In pursuit of joy, they put on a home theatrical, which leads to romantic entanglements and confusion, but there is something else that Mary is not prepared for: the possibility of breaking a heart.
