Something Special (Stories in the Key of C. Minor.) Russell Bittner

Imagine that you're a girl-woman, 18 going on 35, a hayseed blown in from the Midwest to take root as a fashion model in midtown Manhattan. Then imagine that you're trying to take root, any root (well, most any root) with an agent who thinks he lords over that same midtown Manhattan because he happens to nest in a perch on the 85th floor of the Empire State Building.

(This is how we get started.)

Alternatively, imagine you're that agent. That you're a guy, wishing he were still 29 (and consequently pushing back hard on 35), whose job it is to introduce beautiful, young women to the fashion industry—an industry always hungry for fresh young faces and bodies.

(We're still just setting the stage.)

Now imagine that you could eavesdrop on one of this couple's likely conversations: she, eager to the point of impetuous; he, equally eager, but for a very different prize.

The questions remain: Who's going to win, and who's going to lose? And at what price?

Fate has a particularly unattractive way of answering those questions—in, of all unlikely places for an aspiring fashion model and her agent, the savage beauty of Yosemite National Park.

“Something Special” is the only novella—and one of five stories—in Russell Bittner's collection Stories in the Key of C. Minor., first put out by Faraway Publishing and available here at Amazon in both paperback and digital formats.

(Special thanks to Denise Cassino for formatting the cover.)
